Excerpt: .could not but be commensurate with their exertions. Whether our being constantly in the evening and generally on Sunday in each others company; or that the little attendance; . and assiduous which we were in the habit of paying them, won upon them; or the reflection that we were separated. by immense ocean. from our parents, and from our homes--in a foreign country--and, young as we were, buffeting about in a tempestuous world. without one friend to buoy us up should we be sinking. or impart consolation and advice it is certain it is, they took a particular interest in our welfare and happiness. Clara, however, short of stature, was finely formed; she possessed that winning softness of features which every one must admire, whilst her eyes and her hair of jet black--the former sparkling and the latter glossy, contributed to render her extremely interesting. I had before apprised her of my intention of returning to the United States; and on the morning previous to my leaving Valparaiso, visiting her for the last time, I found she had been weeping. At parting, she grasped my hand, and, in her expressive language, said, v Dios, Enriquez! Dios guarde vmd., Senor. Yo csto muy agradecido. Juntos presentaron muchos Ave Maria para vmd., y yo rugo viva cien anos. Which I presume would read literally, Farewell, Henry! God guard...
