A spirit, akin to this, has led to the issuing of the following Journal of a soldier in that expedition. For the purpose of co-operating with General Schuyler, who had the command of the invasion of Canada, Washington planned this expedition to Quebec, which was as remarkable for its novelty and boldness, as for the dangers and difficulties which it involved. These overcome, however, and a brilliant and speedy issue to the struggle in Canada, was rendered almost certain. The subject of this expedition...
