By Ph D Dr Richard Corker-Caulker

Trafford Publishing, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.The author developed interest in the study of addiction after witnessing the impact of drug and alcohol on individuals and their families. The author believed addiction is a disease and the impact of addiction on every day life is real and can not be ignored. Therefore, understanding pre-treatment addiction relapse triggers will be one way of helping individuals caught in the web of daily alcohol and drug use identify, understand the categories, patterns, feelings and level of risk associated with drug and alcohol use. Equally important is the information on pre-treatment addiction relapse triggers necessary for planning relapse intervention before an individual is discharged in to the same or similar community he or she relapsed and arrested. Out of this emerging need and necessity, the author developed Qualitative therapy for use in group process for identifying pre-treatment addiction relapse triggers and qualitative analysis for analyzing categories, patterns, feelings and trigger risk a group or individual may be exposed to if discharged into same or similar environment and be able to learn about what is driving individuals to...
